A WALK THROUGH THE GARDENS
OF PARADISE

THE VOYAGES OF THE FRENCH

‘As we walked over the grass, dotted here and there with fine fruit trees and intersected by little streams, I thought I had been transported to paradise. Everywhere we went, we found hospitality, peace, innocent joy and every appearance of happiness’.

Louis Antoine de Bougainville

It has often been said that the French explorers of the Pacific got it all wrong: that they endowed the Polynesians not with the virtues they had, but with the virtues they thought, as Noble Savages, they ought to have. This criticism is most frequently levelled at the gifted and likeable Louis de Bougainville and his highly intelligent but highly-strung naturalist, Philibert Commerson.

Introduction

It is difficult to understand the Constitution without first knowing something of its history. It was through battles such as those of Velata, Pea and Ngele’a which enabled His Majesty King George Tāufaʻāhau Tupou I to achieve supremacy and the rank of King of all Tonga. The foundation stone of the kingdom was the granting of Emancipation in 1862. It is the Constitution which establishes the form of the State and regulates the land tenure but its primary objective is to bring together the King, Chiefs and People in administering all State affairs and to preserve Freedom.

In other countries emancipation was won by popular movements or parliaments, as for example, in Britain. But here in Tonga it was simply granted by Tupou I and it is still the King’s duty to protect the people and their freedom.

It seems that one reason why nobles were appointed was that the consultative council before the Constitution consisted entirely of chiefs. Though, of course, some of the chiefs were included because they were formerly opposed to emancipation. The inclusion of all these chiefs in the Constitution was to encourage them to support it and help protect it should civil disruption occur in the future.

The Constitution has often been amended and will be amended again. However the laws and the state established by the Constitution have extended the devotion of King George Tāufaʻāhau Tupou I to many generations of Tongan men, women and children right up to the present day.

ESSAY TOPIC:

- Discuss ONE religious practice in the Ancient Tonga Society.
- Assess the outcome of this practice with the coming of Christianity.

Resource C

I called upon the king that day and I found him busy writing. This was a new employment for His Majesty, but he wished to be able to copy Scriptures and other things for his own use.

In looking to the side of the house, I noticed five wooden images suspended by their necks, side by side. I asked the king if he had been hanging the gods and he replied, yes, he had hung them up so that his friends could see that they were dead. He had some thoughts, he said, of taking them to the large house where divine service was performed. I informed him that it might be well to do so, and pile them on a heap there as vanquished false gods.

The subject on the following Sabbath was the Great Commandment, Matthew 22.34, in the morning, and the brazen serpent in the wilderness in the afternoon, from Numbers 21. 4-9. The king was away at the outer islands attending to turtle fishing for the feast. He was supplied with a new book before he set off, but he sent for a sermon to read also, as he would not be able to return for some days. Previous to his setting off for the island the king sent for the turtle net from the heathen friends who had it in charge. They, of course, could not refuse the net to their king, but they laughed contemptuously at the idea that he who had cast off the gods would be able to catch turtles, for they considered that it was the gods who caused the turtles to come into the nets. However, to their surprise, it was soon known that the king and his lotu friends had been successful, and that many turtles had been netted, one of which was about 200 pounds in weight. This was sent to the missionary as a present. In the afternoon of this day, the 18th of June, the canoes sent to Tongatapu returned safe, bringing from our brethren there letters which made our hearts rejoice. The Lord was carrying on his work in Tongatapu, and we blessed his holy name for it...

The king returned on the Saturday evening ready for the Sabbath, greatly pleased with his book and with the great success they had at turtle fishing. There never was anything equal to it before, and we had no doubt but that the heathen would see that not the Tongan gods but Jehovah was Lord of the sea, as well as of the dry land.

Annexing Hawaii: The Real Story
1998 marks the 100th anniversary of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States. The centennial celebrations should not overlook the true nature of the acquisition or the annexation's effect on the peoples indigenous to the Hawaiian islands. The true story behind the annexation of the islands reflects the imperialist nature of the U.S. government at the turn of the previous century and exemplifies the effect of imperialism on indigenous peoples all over the world.
